

SC FSDO FAAS Team presents:

Startle Response

The General Aviation Steering Committee (GAJSC) System/Component Failure work group feels that training and education in coping with events that startle pilots will help to mitigate inappropriate response to sudden onset emergencies.

This presentation acquaints the audience with the nature of human mental functioning and response to stimuli. It describes the human startle response and how it may contribute to aviation accidents.

Suggestions for risk management are offered and pilot proficiency training is recommended.
